What is the network for Apple Find My?

The Find My network is launched by Apple, the network for all Apple devices worldwide (iPhone, iPad and Mac) to help you find lost items. If your things fall in the far places such as parks, gyms, subways, etc., the "Find My" network will help you track your hardware devices that support the Find My network. This vast network consists of tens of thousands of iPhones, iPads and Macs around the world and has been carefully designed to ensure your privacy is protected every step of the way

The "Find My" app is available on iPhone, iPad and Mac, You can use it to easily locate your Apple device, and there's a way to find it even when it's offline. Your privacy is always protected throughout the process.

How does the Find My network work?

Hardware devices that support the Find My network send out a secure Bluetooth signal that can be detected by nearby Apple devices in the Find My network, which send the location of your Find My network-enabled hardware device to iCloud. Then you can see it on the map looking for the "Find My" app. The entire process is anonymous and encrypted to protect your privacy and lookups are efficient, so you don't need to worry about battery life or data consumption.

Thousands of unsung heroes, let's help you find them together

Features of our products that support the Find My network

By partnering with Apple, we've launched hardware products that support the Find My network, and you can call devices in Apple's Find My app to discover items. At the same time, if the device is lost, the Apple Find My network can help find it, which means that all Apple devices (mobile phones, tablets, and MAC) can help find it.
